A happy workforce is a good workforce

OUR working life will take up most of the time we spend on this earth - so it's important that where we work is somewhere we like, and in turn is an employer that meets our expectations.

Work-life balance is a vital aspect of anyone's period in the workforce, as we try to balance the demands of a busy job with living life and all its associated elements, including family, leisure activity, voluntary commitments and so on.

For many employers, a happy workforce is a good workforce, and their goal is to ensure their employees feel valued and are appreciated for the big efforts they make to ensure the company is successful and meets all its targets.

This can be achieved in a number of ways, through various incentive schemes and other ideas, but above all, having a workplace that is a place of positivity, energy and togetherness is the most important aspect of any business.

Here in the North West there are so many employers doing just that and ensuring their employees are in a positive frame of mind, committed to the job they are doing and doing it to the best of their ability.

Beyond the four walls of the business however - or, in a time of remote working, the four walls of your home office! - the location of your workplace will also have a major bearing on your work life.

For example, we are blessed here in the North West with all of the wonderful natural amenities we have at our disposal when it comes to getting out and about outside of work hours.

The many beaches, scenic walks, golf courses and general homely atmosphere makes The North West one of the most attractive places in Ireland in which to work and live.

Above all, it's important that even when we are trying to pursue a career, we make sure it does not impact on physical and mental wellbeing.

LotusWorks - Working locally while growing rapidly nationally and internationally

THE headquarters for engineering solutions company LotusWorks is Finisklin Business Park in Sligo despite the majority of its business being with the world's best-known brands and large manufacturers whose operations are located across Ireland and & North America. Today LotusWorks employs 520 full time staff and the company has been growing steadily in past years and project continued fast paced growth.

“There is exceptional talent available here in Sligo and they are instrumental in supporting our ambitious growth plans to date and into the future. All critical support functions for our dispersed business are here in Sligo- HR, IT, EHS, Marketing, Finance. We have never experienced difficulty in adding the professionals we require to our office teams’ comments Emer Conroy, Director, LotusWorks

Of the 520 staff employed by LotusWorks, 50 are based locally in the company's Sligo HQ working in the 17025 accredited Calibration Laboratory and the support functions of the business. There's a further 110 multidisciplinary engineers & technicians in the Mid-West regions.

“Professionals in Sligo enjoy excellent work life balance, pay and benefits. Couple that with access to a huge selection of outdoors activities, excellent restaurants and beautiful scenery and Sligo is genuinely a great place to live and work. From a business ownership perspective, we are surrounded by the support of other great businesses operating in Sligo. We also have great relationships with our local Enterprise Ireland office, the Sligo Chamber of Commerce, the local Skillsnet organisation and ITSligo- adds Emer Conroy LotusWorks is respected locally for its commitment to “giving back” charitable activity. In recent years the company established and hosted the annual Finisklin Charity Cup, has had coffee mornings and given time to support local events raising substantial funds for Finisklin based Maryville Homeless Shelter the Northwest Hospice, Special Olympics & Sligo Cancer Support Centre.

In April, LotusWorks was announced as a Great Place to Work for the fifth year - cementing the company's position as a trusted employer. Commenting on LotusWorks' vision for the future Conroy said: “Our focus remains to help our talent succeed, provide meaningful work in a supportive environment and to continue to offer expert support to our clients. We are very lucky to have the opportunity to do that while living here in the land of hearts desire.”
